FULL TEXT

Agile Stacks reported that it enables multi-cloud support through new deployments on Google Cloud Platform (GCP), Microsoft Azure, and Red Hat OpenShift.

According to a media release, the developments complement Agile Stacks' existing support for Amazon Web Services (AWS), enabling enterprise customers to leverage four of the most widely adopted cloud platforms, accelerate their software delivery, and simplify the management of hybrid cloud deployments.

Using Agile Stacks, organizations can deploy full-stack Kubernetes, DevOps cloud stacks, and ML pipelines using their technologies of choice out of the box within minutes, a process that used to take weeks or months to complete.

"Agile Stacks is the first DevOps automation platform that addresses full-stack deployment using an automation hub approach, which reduces the development-deployment friction, so enterprises can bring their innovations to market quickly," said Igor Mameshin, Agile Stacks co-founder and CTO. "With application templates and AI/ML pipelines, development teams now can build their apps faster and deploy to multiple environments using GitOps and automated CI/CD processes. Together with our partners, we now deliver this solution on four of the leading Kubernetes-based platforms: GKE, EKS, AKS, and Red Hat OpenShift, giving developers the deployment options and flexibility that they demand."
